

Drills and game-situation exercises for shooting

11

DRILL DESCRIPTION
Players take a series of shots from 10 metres out, with the ball stationary, and with the focus on precise placement. The goal is divided into four sections (two upper and two lower) by hazard tape.

VARIATIONS
The ball can be moving when the shots are taken.

1.4.3.6 Shooting

A successful attack ends with a shot on goal. The player who takes the shot needs to find the right balance between accuracy and power. Coaching that focuses on correcting errors in shooting accuracy may prioritise aiming at the following targets: the whole goal, to the keeper's right or left, the inside of the posts (high up or low down).

Shooting from wide positions
Forwards positioned on the left side of the court should shoot with their left foot and forwards positioned on the right should shoot with their right. They should aim towards the far post, so that if the shot is not on target it can be redirected by a team-mate. A shot aimed at the far post may therefore lead to the continuation of the move with a subsequent shot on goal.

Cutting in from wide positions to shoot
A coach can put right-footed players on the left and vice versa so that they can cut in from the flank and shoot on goal. The various options include a shot back across goal, with the player shooting towards the opposite side of the goal in relation to the direction of their run, deceiving the goalkeeper, who makes an initial sideways movement to cover the anticipated direction of the shot and is then wrong-footed.

1.4.3.7 Headers

There are three types of header: forward, sideways and back.

Players can head the ball with their feet on the ground (possibly while making a forward lunge) or when jumping off one or both feet.

The coaching of heading initially involves drills from a sitting position, in which the player heads a ball thrown by a team-mate. This is followed by various standing drills with players heading the ball either stationary, in a forward lunge position, or bouncing up and down on the spot. The final stage involves a complete range of movements, including forward and backward runs.

DRILL DESCRIPTION
Four groups of two players are positioned as follows on half a court: two groups are by the corner arcs (one in one corner, one in the other), and the other two groups are on either side near the halfway line, with the goalkeeper in the goal. One of the players in a corner plays a diagonal pass to a team-mate by the halfway line, who can either shoot first time or run with the ball briefly before shooting. The groups are rotated at the end of the drill.

DRILL DESCRIPTION
A player stands in each corner of a half-court with a ball. An attacker and a defender are in the middle. The attacker should receive the ball from one of their four team-mates in the corners and shoot first time at one of the two goals.

DRILL DESCRIPTION
Two teams of two line up against each other in half a court. The team with the ball can either take a direct shot or play a one-two with a player (shown in blue) in the neutral zone (from the goal line to the edge of the penalty area) before shooting. The players in the neutral zone can take a maximum of two touches.
